

HOW THE KeNIC COMMITTEE IN CHARGE OF THE LAUNCH OF SECOND LEVEL DOMAIN (SLD) WANT TO KEEP ALL THE PREMIUM SECOND LEVEL DOMAINS FOR THEMSELVES

If you don't know anything about the launch of Kenya's SLDs, see:

<http://www.KeNIC.or.ke/index.php/en/ke-second-level-domain/second-level-domain> and the pages linked on the left. Go ahead and read that first before continuing, I'll wait.

Imagine you take months planning a bank robbery and execute it with military precision. Everything goes according to plan. But as you get away, your loot spills into the streets where members of the public merrily help themselves to it. You had locked the door of your get away van wrong...

No, I couldn't make this stuff up.

TL;DR

Part of the committee in charge of overseeing the launch of the Kenya's second level domains (SLDs) had decided to keep all and I mean ALL the prime (and valuable) domain names for themselves, but a bug in KeNIC's software allowed the precious domains to be released to the members of public for registration – twice, leaving the schemers seething with rage and frantically trying to come up with ways to secure their loot.

LONG STORY

The plan was hatched last year. Anyone (deserving or not) who applied for any domain under Sunrise and Grandfathering that the committee considered prime was denied their rightful name and was told that the name had go for bidding in an online auction. They were given an lame excuse or the other why this had to be the case.

Come auction time, the committee procured a system they could easily manipulate.

Although ILance, the company that provided KeNIC with the auction software provides secure hosting options, the team opted to do hosting on a separate (non-secure) server for ease of manipulation. A visit to <http://auction.KeNIC.or.ke> will reveal the protocol is the non-secure 'http://' and not the secure <https://>. How can you host a system where people are going to bid money on a none secure server? SSL Certificates are dirt cheap, even free! This was not oversight. It was by design.

Secondly the team disabled ability of the ILance bidding system to verify users' email addresses. Think about this for a moment. The system was open to anyone from all over the world. People are going to bid for things that cost money, and there is no pre-qualification whatsoever, not even checking if their email address is valid? Again, by design not oversight.

Thirdly, the team added hundreds (it's no exaggeration) of FAKE users to the system. The purpose of the fake users was to make sure they outbid genuine users on all the good domains that the team wanted to keep for themselves. And bid they did. On some domains, it was just these fake users bidding against each other! It wasn't a lot of manual work, really. All the team was doing was to run SQL scripts directly against the MYSQL database to place bids. As you can see in the two tables below, all the good domains were won by these fake users.

When the auction ended out of the 1156 domains that were placed through the auction, only 24 were won by genuine users and not all of these users could pay for what they bid for.

The committee reported back to the CEO who in turn reported back to the board that the auction was infiltrated by jokers and they didn't do well at all. The committee was given the greenlight to put everything for General Availability – this simply means first come first served basis.

This is what the committee wanted all along. The plan at this point was to prevent the public from registering any domain in their loot, and they would register them for themselves later when the attention around the launch goes down. Since the list of auction winners was not published anywhere, and everyone assumed that all the names placed on auction were won by genuine users, everyone would understand if the nice name they always wanted is not available during General Availability. Nice plan, huh? Even how, if you ask for the availability of any prime name, you'll be told "it went for bidding"!

THINGS FALL APART

But the COCCA registry software that KeNIC uses had other ideas. You see, of all the registries that use COCCA, no other uses the Sunrise module, and even KeNIC was using the module for the first time. So, some corner case bugs in this system have never been shaken off. It follows that when the committee modified a 'reserved' setting against a prime domain they wanted to keep for themselves, then opened the system for General Availability registrations, the system ignored this setting and only reserved the names under which the registrants' information has already been entered. So, on 16th January 2018, members of the public found that they could register all the names they wanted, and register they did! The committee realized this, engineered a fake outage and used that as an excuse to delete all the names registered so far. Hoping that they would fix the problem and reserve their loot. But even even as they deleted the names already in the register, COCCA automatically re-registered a list of names that was pre ordered which included part of the names the committed wanted to keep! On 19th, the day of General Availability, the committee thought that the error was behind them but as they opened doors to General Availability, their reserved names were registrable again and registrars and the public registered the prime domains.

The only hold the committee has to their loot at the moment is that the names they had tried to reserve have the statuses: `serverHold`, `pendingCreate`. This means that the committee has to manually create the names in the system.

The committee is now torn into two. One group is for doing the right thing, accept that they lost and create the names for those people who secured them in the General Availability. The other group are the hardliners, led by one Brian Nyali. They believe that the heist is still on. If a registrar asks about a name that was registered during General Availability, and the name was previously in the auction list, you are told that only the auction winner can register it. An auction winner they know very well will never come, because they are fake, they don't exist, never have. They are just taking everyone for a ride!

IF SOMEONE WON AN ITEM IN AN AUCTION WHY DON'T YOU ASSIGN IT TO HIM BEFORE OPENING UP THE MARKET??

In short, if you managed to secure a name during General Availability, and that name is one of those that were 'won' by the fake users, it will be denied you under the guise that it was won in the auction. The truth is you are just being denied the name because Nyali and Co. are interested in it.

The Genuine Users who paid for their domains have already been assigned their domains. And their domains are LIVE. See table 1 below.

I see they have brought down the auction site. Removed all the data. My guess is that they want to come up with their own 'alternative' list of people who 'won'. Anyone who would wish to investigate this should ask for the database backups and see that the information matches the information below to a 't'!

IF YOU KNOW ANYONE IN A POSITION OF POWER WHO CAN HELP ABOUT THIS SITUATION, PLEASE FORWARD THEM THIS DOCUMENT. THIS IS NOT PAST TENSE, IT'S HAPPENING AS YOU READ THIS.

The information below is directly from KeNIC server. Identities of the Genuine bidders has been withheld for their own protection.
